Qualities for being an ally

- Humility – being passionately aware that you could be completely wrong.
- Ability to listen carefully.
- Sense of humour – not taking yourself too seriously.
- Patience – for the long haul of the struggle and for different ways of working.
- Usefulness – it's not about being right or good it's about being useful.
- Knowing yourself – your identity and history.
- Knowing and acknowledging whose land you are on – the history of people and place.
- Groundedness – inner strength and the ability to stay calm in challenging situations.
- A thick skin – the ability to hear criticism constructively. Understanding criticism within the broader context of colonial injustice rather than taking it personally. An understanding that you may be a safe target for understandable rage – develop the ability to hear that rage.
- Endurance – messing up, learning, picking up and keeping on.
- Long-term commitment – which includes a commitment to personal sustainability and sustainability of relationships.
- Flexibility – an ability to go with the flow.
- Letting go of knowing, of being right, of having the answers – always being aware of how much you do not know.
- Being open to constant learning – acting, making mistakes, getting feedback, reflecting, acting. Check your ideas with people who do not always agree with you.
- Courage – to act, to take a stand.
- Critical awareness – political awareness, strategic thinking.
- Self-awareness – knowing your skills and what you can offer, knowing your limits, awareness of not dominating, awareness of power, ability to reflect.
- Honesty, humility, courage, wisdom, respect, generosity and love – The Ojibwe Seven Grandfather Teachings.

Note: This is not intended as a check list of abstract concepts—these qualities need to be demonstrated through on-going action in the context of alliances.
